This long awaited sequel to Jackson Galaxy and Kate Benjamin's New York Times Bestseller "Catification: Designing a Happy and Stylish Home for Your Cat (and You)" combines Jackson's wealth of experience working with challenging cats, Kate's expertise with cat-friendly design and DIY projects, and ideas from members of Catification Nation to provide more than twenty projects and a huge number of simple design tricks to help cat guardians provide a truly enriched environment for their feline family members. Jackson delves deeply into key issues of catification. Topics covered include setting up a base camp for your cat and why scratching is so vital to a cat's mental and physical well-being. He explains why cat superhighways are such an important component of allowing cats to navigate their territory, especially in multicat homes. Jackson, as we know by now, is all about the cat's point of view, and he pulls no punches when it comes to telling it to us straight. I particularly liked the section on litter box issues, where Jackson speaks out against automatic self-cleaning litter boxes and covered boxes. And while the book does offer some creative solutions for hiding litter boxes, they always put the cat's needs ahead of human sensibilities. Kate provides plenty of design tips that range from the simple (placing a yoga mat on the top of a cabinet to turn it into an instant vertical lounging space) to the more complex (building your own cat tunnel cocoon.) Kate makes even the simplest design hacks look appealing so they integrate beautifully into your living space. Each section features a "Faces in the Nation" • showcase of a catification project.
